A 3,500 sf loft space is the setting for the management office of an expressive and adventurous developer. The spatial composition of a colonnade detailed with sheet metal, roof gutters and intersecting planes of various heights and angles, establishes a formal axial plan. Private offices and conference rooms are located directly off the main axis, further articulating circulation and office zones. Plywood wall paneling in the Conference Room suggests a distinguished atmosphere while respecting the existing context within the brick and timber enclosure.
